GHOSTS

This is a subject I have covered extensively in my books. For example, lost souls is covered on pages 15 and 45 in Journey of Souls, in Destiny of souls especially on pages 54-56 where I also mention the Redeemer Masters who are special guides that are able to help guide a soul with unfinished business on earth to go with them into the light. In my book, Life Between Lives Hypnotherapy, on pages 70-71 I get into the aspect of attachments. This particular subject of souls who have not left earthly environment also has an Archive folder on just the subject of Attchements.

What I want to do with this position paper on Ghosts is to focus on the aspects of souls who are still attached to past events in a particular place and time. They don't leave in a matter of a few days and could wait around for a much longer period. I have found that most have died suddenly in an unexpected fashion such as being killed. Actually, much of their energy may have returned to the spirit world to re-join what they left there before incarnating into a troubled life. Ghosts usually project sadness over what they perceive to be an injustice done to them or a desire to protect someone who they think is in danger.

There are two aspects connected with the appearance of a disturbed ghost. The first is a ghost who is locked into an event such as the Battle of Gettysburg in July, 1863 during the Civil War. Ghosts have been seen here but always on the battlefield itself, in uniform, replaying the actions of that July over and over by their apparitions. They represent men who were killed and local residents who see them say it is like watching a movie being replayed over and over. This type of visualization has been called a Residue Echo from the past.

These are like psychic visual reruns where an event is impressed on the electromagnetic energy of the atmosphere in the immediate vicinity of the troubling event. This recorded event is then replayed at various times—day or night—like a “tape loop” when the atmospheric energy conditions are just right. It can play over and over for centuries with the fingerprint of the residue ghost as opposed to an active ghost who moves through time often wanting changes to redress past wrongs.

The second type is a more active ghost and represents a disturbed spirit who remains part of a current scene and will go where ever that scene progresses into current time. This type of ghost wants corrections made to unfinished business. Here there seems to be intelligent control by a ghost who shifts with conditions. Often there is a desire to correct an injustice or to protect someone they care about who they think is in danger. I once had a client who came to my house in the high Sierras in Northern California because I had closed my office in Los Angeles. She was from Covina near Los Angeles and had purchased an old house that had been partially burned by fire. She intended to destroy the rest of the house once owned by an eccentric rancher who would not sell his place in the early 20th century even though he was by then an old man. There were people who wanted the land for development and tried to burn his house down before they were stopped. This ghost now wanted my client to stop her plans. My fireplace, which was empty except for a few scraps of paper suddenly came ablaze and generated smoke all over the room. This delayed the start of our session and my client said, "Oh, this is no accident, "he" wants our attention. My family has had trouble with this disturbed spirit ever since we bought the old farmhouse." We both knelt down in front of the fireplace and reasoned with the spirit and apparently reached a compromise because there was no more disturbances in my house or the house of my client later after she returned home.

When the subject of ghosts has come up during lectures and on radio shows someone may ask if the disturbed spirit is fearful of going to hell and thus resists leaving an earthly plane? I find this not to be true, especially in cases where a loving guide has already tried to lead them into the light. Despite the many books written about ghosts, most leave rather quickly after a few days and there are not a lot of them around. Also, in Chapter 2 of Destiny of Souls I explain how spirits return to connect with the living, especially loved ones left behind, to provide comfort and assurance they still exist. These entities are not considered ghosts and seem to travel to and from the spirit world between lives because they are trying to help those they care about.
